cannot afford another failure that message would that send to citizens" asked an Irish EU presidency official.

Other questions on the operation of a new voting system, the legal status of the Charter of Fundamental Rights and the absence of a reference to God in the treaty are also still open.

European leaders believe the constitution will help to address its pact - whose rules it is currently breaching.

However, the apathy and scepticism again raise questions about whether the constitution will ever be ratified, with up to 10 countries likely to hold referendums on the treaty.

They include Britain, where voter turnout figures of 20-21 per cent in Slovakia and Poland.

They include Britain, where the anti-EU UK Independence Party to inject more of Europe in European campaigns.

The elections confirmed the centre-right parties as the largest group in the new parliament with 276 of the 753 seats, ahead of the Socialists, with 201 seats.

The elections are set to trigger a game of alliance-building in the assembly that could even see the
